Welcome from the American Society for Ethnohistory President

Dr. Nancy Shoemaker, University of Connecticut

Welcome to the 2019 annual meeting of the American Society for Ethnohistory at Penn State University in State College, Pennsylvania. As always, this year’s conference promises to immerse us in stimulating conversations as we share our research with each other and at the same time catch up with old friends and meet newcomers to ethnohistory who are joining us for the first time.

On behalf of the association, I wish to extend a big thanks to our colleagues at Penn State for offering to host the annual conference and for the selfless service that putting together such a large conference requires. All evidence thus far suggests that this year’s meeting has been superbly well-organized and that we are about to be treated to an incomparable feast of foods, beverages, and ideas.

Enjoy!

Welcome from the Organizing and Local Arrangements Committees

Dr. Amara Solari, The Pennsylvania State University

Welcome to the “Happy Valley,” home of The Pennsylvania State University and host for the American Society for Ethnohistory’s 2019 annual meeting. Ancestral home of the Erie, Seneca, Oneida, Lenape, Munsee, Shawnee, and Susquehannock tribes, the forested mountains and valleys of the greater state of Pennsylvania have long been inhabited by Indigenous peoples of the Americas. In line with the theme of this year’s conference, “Roots/Routes,” we gather this year to interrogate constructed notions of place, and to explore how Indigenous peoples have utilized movement and exchange to create new places and to reconfirm cultural practices. These queries are important within larger historical contexts, but also ripe for analysis at a time when forces have coalesced to force Indigenous peoples to re-chart our changed world. The members of the organizing, local arrangements, exhibition, and program committees join me in hoping that we find our few days together intellectually engaging, ideologically challenging, and perhaps most importantly, politically inspiring.

In the summer of 1970, seventeen Indian graduate students from throughout the United States arrived at Penn State University to become the first participants in the American Indian Leadership Program (AILP). Over the next four decades more than 200 students from numerous Native nations and geographic locations throughout North American participated in the program.

The AILP is housed in Penn State's College of Education, Department of Education Policy Studies. It is one of the oldest and most successful programs of its kind. Its objectives were the training of qualified leaders for service to Indian nations, objectives consistent with the goals of the Indian Education Act and the needs of American Indian communities nationwide.

Graduates of the program hold positions as administrators in a variety of educational institutions including tribal colleges, public universities and colleges, Bureau of Indian Education schools, and other tribal and public schools serving Native children. A number of alumni are administrators in organizations, institutions, or government agencies concerned with the education of Native people. Still others are educational planners for tribal organizations, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, state and federal Indian education agencies, and educational organizations serving American Indian and Alaska Native students.

As part of this year’s Ethnohistory conference, we are honored to have a panel of distinguished alumni from the AILP who will share the history and legacy of this important program. The AILP shaped American Indian education during the second half of the twentieth century (Panel #82 Session Four on Saturday). The panelists will also reflect on the future Indigenous education and on-going role that Penn State (and Ethnohistorians) can play in the twenty-first century. The Program Committee gratefully thanks them for sharing their time and expertise with us.
