The journal is currently ranked 30/83 in International Relations.

General responsibilities of the editorship include:

- Soliciting and encouraging submissions
- Leading on the strategic development of the Journal with a particular focus on maintaining quality and impact.
- Managing the receipt and peer review of scholarly submissions, liaising with authors, and responsibility for the selection and revision of articles.
- Delivering copy to the publisher upon acceptance and according to agreed production schedules.
- Managing and working with the international editorial board.
- Representing the Journal in your position as Editor, and promoting the Journal when possible, and with the support of the SAGE marketing team.

The individual or team would begin a four-year term on January 1, 2015. (There is some possibility that the term can begin on July 1, 2015.) There will also be some transitional duties during late 2014 or early 2015.

The editor(s) should hold secure positions at an academic institution and receive sufficient support from their home institution for their editorial tasks. An editorial honorarium is offered with this position.

Those interested in making an application should send a CV, supported by a letter that outlines the experience and ability to perform the role. Ideally, each application should specifically address the applicant's aims and vision for the journal over the term of editorship.

The search committee will review all proposals meeting essential criteria as soon as possible. The search will continue until an editor has been appointed. Applications from individuals or editorial teams will be considered.

Applications should be submitted to Glenn Palmer, at gpalmer@psu.edu
